

WHY WAS A NEW THREE-YEAR PLAN NEEDED?

When NBN Co culled its three-year construction plan five days before Christmas 2016, it laid down a challenge.

Removing the detailed document – which described the type of access technology an area would get and when – further eroded public oversight of a $49 billion+ project at a time when taxpayers found themselves even more exposed via a new $19.5 billion loan.

It's taken the best part of two months and many late nights, but we've now fully reconstructed the only three-year construction plan ever published by NBN Co. This new version is current as of March 2, 2017.

Restoring this document provides a base level of transparency on a whole-of-project basis. We hope you find it useful.

Guide to interpreting the document

Suburbs are grouped by fibre or wireless serving area (FSA and WSA); those with a blank space in that field belong to the FSA listed closest above. States are denoted by their number: 2 is NSW, 3 is Victoria etc.

Additionally, since NBN Co published its three-year construction plan it has changed its performance metrics.

The old plan listed an 'estimated time to commence construction date' for each area within the rollout. It has since replaced this metric with 'availability', meaning when a service will become available. The two metrics aren't comparable.
